

How to Develop Your Rap Voice

Sounding more pleasant

Embrace your voice

Your voice is unique, and the primary way in which you express yourself. If you dislike or voice, or think it's fine as is, it can always be improved.

Make an audio recording of your voice as it is now for future reference. Over the next 30 days, consciously practice reading out loud for 20 minutes. This will improve your pronunciation, strengthen your projection, and help you learn new words that you can use in your raps.

Tell your story

Honesty will attract listeners and ultimately lead to them becoming fans. That's because when they rap they are rapping from personal experience. This experience can be direct or indirect.

When you tell your own story in your raps you'll sound more authentic and relatable. It's easy to tell whether or not a person believes in what they are saying based on the tone of their voice. The emotions you convey through your voice will give the listener something to latch onto.

Listen to other rappers

How do some of your favorite rappers use their voice to its fullest potential? Incorporate some of their techniques. Just remember to not copy their styles; instead blend it with yours.

Don't just limit yourself to rappers that you like. What are some of the other rappers doing. And why stop there? Reference artists and musicians in general to learn from them.

Establish a routine

Treat your voice as an instrument. It's your responsibility to take care of it. In that way you will get the most out of it. Practice on a consistent basis, and remember to rest your voice to prevent strain.
